Developing Connecticut's Transit Future Forum

The Partnership for Strong Communities sponsored the "Developing Connecticut's Transit Future: Strategic Placemaking and Economic Opportunity" forum on Friday, June 15, 2012. Due to the number of attendees the event was moved from the Lyceum to the Legislative Office Building. Keynote Speaker Stan Eckstut, FAIA, Principal, EE&K said "public space is about quality not quantity in placemaking" and that there is the tendency to think of transit as a daytime operation, not a nighttime operation. He noted that policies need to integrate transit, housing and pedestrian friendly streets and that transit agencies need to work with developers. Robert Lane, RPA said that, "people will not walk one minute if they don't feel safe, but if people perceive the walk as safe and scenic they will walk ten minutes to transit." Duo Dickinson, architect from Madison regaled the audience with his experiences successfully getting Madison to rethink their approach to landscaping and enhancing the transit station. A panel discussion followed.

It's Not Pretty Just Pretty Effective

This cross section of our galvanized steel roll cage makes a bus "a bus". These steel sidewalls extend beneath the floor and when welded and bolted in place, provide added strength and safety in the event of an accident. It may seem strange, but we spend considerable time thinking about safety, because although your passengers take it for granted, we can't. That's why we build it in from the ground up, then test it—specifically the FMVSS 214 side impact test.

At a proving facility in Wisconsin, a 4,000 lb. steel sled approaching 35 m.p.h. slammed into the side of our bus. The concussion was mind blowing—the damage to the bus was minimal. In fact, we drove the bus back home! Steel cage design is unique to our buses and as noted above, it's not pretty, just pretty effective.

Here are just a few more features:

- Low center of gravity that reduces rollover potential.
- Floor frame of 11 gauge steel Z members.
- Laminated walls for structural integrity.
